How We Collect Personal Data and How We Use It and What Legal Basis on which we rely

Customer relationship management based on Legitimate Interest

We collect data about you both through interactions we have with you as well as from third party professional sources. We use that data, based upon our legitimate interest, to understand your medical preferences, priorities and needs:

- Communications: to deliver information about our areas of expertise, our products and the rare diseases for which they are indicated;
- Insights: to improve the effectiveness of the promotional, scientific and educational information we provide; to maintain and record our relationship with you;
- Engagement: to contact you to arrange visits or to invite you to meetings or events or to engage in market research and to remember how and when we have interacted with you;

We receive information about you such as (first name, middle name, surname, gender, academic title, specialty, work address, phone number work language, type of your practice, your position) ("your Personal Data") from a trusted Third Party that provides industry recognized lists of healthcare professionals. If you attend scientific or educational meetings, conference and workshops we sponsor, we also receive information regarding your attendance from the organizations that conduct those events.

Analysis and profiling based on Legitimate Interest

We rely on our legitimate interest to better understand the needs of the medical communities we aim to serve; we may analyze information about our interactions, events and activities with you and other health care professionals and store that information in a way that help us improve how we provide information and engage specifically with you. This may include understanding of your diagnosis and treatment approaches and how they correspond to Alexion products and the diseases for which they are indicated for the purposes of a better and more accurate diagnose, treatment and patients referral.

Our goal is to support a true Omnichannel approach, in order to better know our HCPs, and make them better informed about diseases and products. For this purpose, we need to be able to collect and leverage information about you and other HCPs and propose initiatives that better support the "Customer Journey".

We may apply some basic profiling on your data in order to better program our visits with you and other health care professionals and to better identify healthcare professionals with which Alexion may wish to collaborate.

We may apply some basic profiling in order to assess your specialties, as well as level of expertise and skills against public sources (such as publications and conferences) and your prior engagements with us.

As we are relying on our Legitimate Interest, we have carefully assessed the potential effects when analyzing and profiling healthcare professionals like you and concluded that there are neither significant nor legal effects or risks posed to you. Under certain circumstances, you may exercise your opposition rights by contacting Alexion at privacy@alexion.com or by using the contact section below. We currently do not use any machine/computer/algorithm to provide such analysis or profiling.
